

Charges Some U. S. Officials Violating Act

Washington, Sept. 25 — (UP) — House investigators are checking reports that certain government officials have violated the Hatch act by preparing political speeches for use in the presidential campaign, it was learned today.

Chairman Forest A. Harless, R., Ind., will return to the capital shortly to decide whether to open public hearings on the issue by his House subcommittee on publicity and propaganda.

The subcommittee's investigators are looking into reports that government workers have written speeches for delivery by cabinet officers in behalf of President Truman's candidacy.

Three major government agencies are understood to be involved in the investigation. They are the agriculture and interior departments and the Federal Security Administration.

Some of the officials under surveillance are being checked not only for speech preparation but also for allegedly distributing campaign materials, it was learned.

The Hatch so-called "clean politics" act makes it unlawful for any person employed in an executive agency to take an active part in any political campaign or to use official influence for the purpose of affecting the results of an election.

The act, however, exempts the president, vice president, cabinet officers, and assistant secretaries, as well as other policy-making officials whose appointment requires Senate confirmation.

Meanwhile, staff members of the House executive expenditures subcommittee on campaign spending are now in the field investigating possible violations of the corrupt practices act in a number of congressional campaigns.

The investigators already have checked into reports of irregularities in the Ninth Congressional district of Pennsylvania and in several districts in Tennessee. They also have received information about possible irregularities in the Second and 23rd Congressional districts of California.

Hunt for Assassin Difficult

By ROBERT S. MILLER

Jerusalem, Sept. 25 — (UP) — The government of Israel has been slow going in hunting down the assassins of Count Folke Bernadotte.

Israel police and military officers, who last year ridiculed the British for their inability to stamp out terrorism in Palestine, have found their own methods equally ineffective.

The terrorist shoe is on the other foot and it is beginning to hurt. Hundreds have been arrested, but they are all small fry. The top 10 wanted men, the Stern gang members, are still at large. At least one of them is still in Israel. I had in direct contact with him less than 48 hours ago.

A week has passed since Bernadotte's murder and his assassins still are free. Their organization still is active. It even plasters large posters about Jerusalem threatening the government.

Wanted terrorists boldly claim that even Prime Minister David Ben Gurion may be next on the list if he links himself with "Western imperialists attempting to dominate our country."

No important clues yet have been unearthed and authorities still are mystified by the identity and whereabouts of the murderers. To appease a growing clamor for results, police even have been attempting to plant fictitious information to the effect that new and important clues have been found, such as the murder weapon.

The news that at least one arrested Sternist escaped jail and has not been recaptured still is a sore in Palestine.

The government is putting on the pressure and the police honestly are trying to track down the criminals. But they now realize for the first time the difficulties faced by the British.

The British, getting the full support of the populace as they expected despite the $20,000 reward posted for the killers. The average citizen still is not convinced the government can protect him from reprisals if he gives out information. Everyone wants the assassins caught, but no one wants to meet the same fate.

That Grady Hasley, age 15, 208 Greenlawn St., Prescott, is an honest youth, can be verified today by Syd McMath of Hope and his sister, Mrs. John H. Greene of Little Rock.

While enroute to Little Rock, McMath stopped in Prescott, Mrs. Greene lost her purse containing about $80 in cash and a diamond ring. They continued the journey believing that the purse was gone forever.

The following morning Mrs. Greene received a special delivery letter from young Hasley who had found the purse and gotten her address from a gasoline company attendant in the purse. Needless to say, young Hasley was graciously thanked and rewarded.

Russia Would Reduce Arms of 5 Powers

By LOUIS NEVIN

Paris, Sept. 25 — (AP) — Russia proposed today that the five major powers reduce their armed forces by a third inside of one year.

Accusing the United States, Britain and France of trying to isolate Russia by means of military alliances, Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Andrei Y. Vishinsky asked the United Nations general assembly to set up an international control body to supervise reduction of armaments of armed forces and prohibition of atomic weapons.

Vishinsky said he proposed this resolution in order to strengthen the cause of peace and eliminate "the threat of a new war fomented by expansionists and other reactionary elements." The expansionists, he contended, are all west of the iron curtain.

The GOP, Mr. Truman continued, is saving up a "lot of special interest measures" to offer if the next Congress doesn't have too many Democrats to protect the people" and added in a departure from a prepared manuscript: "and help the country if that happens."

Mr. Truman rolled today through Tucson with a 20-minute stop planned for Lordsburg, N. M.

He will appear on the platform again at Deming, N. M. En route to El Paso, Texas where he is due for a speaking engagement at noon.

Other talks at Sierra Blanca, Texas, 3:35 p. m., (CST); Valentine, 5:30 p. m.; Marfa, 6:25 p. m.; Alpine, at 9:25 p. m. and at San-derson appeared likely.

Police estimated an upwards of 7,000 persons the audience which stayed up until 11 o'clock, Phoenix time, to hear the president when he pledged his own party to develop the nations rivers for flood control, navigation, reclamation and power.

"You are vitally interested in water for your cities and irrigation projects in the development of power from your rivers," Mr. Truman said.

"Just now you are very much interested in the completion of the Davis dam and the network of transmission lines. This will give you the power you have to have to carry on, and you will get it at much cheaper rates. Our goal for completing that project is 1950. We can finish it on schedule—if we can keep the Republicans from throwing more monkey wrenches into the machinery."

He said the harnessing of the Colorado river for beneficial uses in "the kind of empire building I like" continued.

"I want to see the day when all the waters of that mighty river will be put to their best possible use."

"The big problem," he said, "is to settle the division of the waters among the states of the Colorado river basin, since there is not enough to meet all needs."

As Mr. Truman moved Eastward on his 9,500-mile 10-state stumping tour, an aide said his next major speech will be in reply to statements by Republican nominee Dewey that Communist influences have seeped into the administration.

The speech is scheduled for Oklahoma City Tuesday.

Truman Hangs 'Me Too' Tag on Republicans

Aboard Truman Campaign Train, Sept. 25 — (AP) — President Truman sought today to hang a "me, too" tag on Republican promises to develop the Great River valleys and to Southwest-ern voters "it's safer" to elect the Democrats.

Mr. Truman carried his fighting campaign from Arizona into New Mexico and Texas with the claim that the GOP wants to "move the capital from Washington back to Wall Street."

He stirred a train-side audience at Phoenix to cheers and applause last night when he said Arizona's Davis dam and transmission lines will be completed on schedule in 1950 "if we can keep the Republicans from throwing more monkey wrenches into the machinery."

"Serenade To Ruth," a six-minute piece, in 23 hours flat. He stood on his feet all night, jotting down notes on a piano top, to finish it. He is prolific to an extent he doesn't seem quite to realize himself. He has written so many times he has forgotten how some of them go, and has to be reminded of their names.

Before he began composing what his cello-playing grandfather distastefully dismissed as "shoo-fly music," Grofe ran away from home at the age of 14. He ushered in a theater, drove a truck and worked in a book bindery and an iron foundry until he returned to his family profession in 1900 as a violinist with the Los Angeles symphony orchestra.

These experiences Grofe remembered later when he began the task of "describing America in music."

Today his chief interest is composing band music, a field he feels has been neglected.

"There are more than 125,000 school bands on America. They want new music."

And Ferde can compose it. Like William Shakespeare or Dr. Samuel Johnson he is a business man as well as an artist.

"It's a gold mine," he said, his gray-blue eyes twinkling in a plump buccal face.

In composing his well known "March For Americans," Grofe said he put down a hundred fragments of things he felt he had what he wanted.

"Took me a whole week," he complained mildly.

While Little Rock went outside the state last (Friday) night to defeat Classen High of Oklahoma City 16-0, the Bobcats won their second Big Six conference victory of the season, defeating Hot Springs 13-0.

The Oklahoma game was the 34th straight victory for the powerful Tigers. Fort Smith, with previous wins over Double A Van Buren and Big Six El Dorado, displayed impressive line power in downing the Trojans.

The three other Big Six entries took on Double A competition last night, one unsuccessfully. North Little Rock topped Texarkana 18-0 and El Dorado defeated Fayetteville 14-0, but El Dorado suffered a 20-12 setback at the hands of Hope, which looms as one of the state's leading two-A teams.

At Hope, an unusual play broke a 13-13 tie and put El Dorado behind. A pass from center hit the back of an El Dorado back and bounded into the air. Jimmie Dick Hammons, son of a former Hope coach, grabbed it and raced 35 yards to score.

Romance of Aged Ends Suddenly

Boise, Ida., Sept. 24.—(UP)—Mrs. Jessie E. Lewis, 80, Kansas City, Mo., today wrote off her romance with an 80-year-old Idaho legislator as just one more experience in a long lifetime.

The romance took former State Rep. J. W. Lewis of Idaho, 80, and $8,000 judgment awarded Mrs. Simmons by a federal court yesterday.

Mrs. Simmons, a pert little gray-haired lady, charged that Lewis had promised to marry her in Salt Lake City last April, and then ducked out.

She had asked $20,700 for breach of promise.

Lewis denied that he asked Mrs. Simmons to marry him. But he admitted writing a letter which said:

"I want a wedding that is plain, simple and sacred. I hope you are never disappointed in me."

Mrs. Simmons testified that Lewis was very attentive to her during visits.

"He took me in his arms and I pulled away from him, but he said 'come on and let's have those kisses,'" she said. Mrs. Simmons said she sat on Lewis' lap for 10 to 15 minutes.

But Lewis declared from the witness stand that Mrs. Simmons was the aggressor.

"She offered me a chair," he said. "I sat down and she came and parked herself on my lap. She remained there until I suggested we sit on the dayporch."

Lewis' attorney said "Mrs. Simmons' actions were part of a carefully worked out plan to marry Lewis."

Mrs. Simmons' attorney replied "the defense attorney is trying to cast my client in the role of a designing woman."

president will answer that one next Tuesday at Oklahoma City.

The Republican nominee—who previously has ignored most of Mr. Truman's thrusts—did some answering, too.

He brought cheers from the crowd with the assertion:

"I'm mighty proud of any party, which has been so abused in recent days and of the 39th Congress."

The president has been hearing down on Congress in what most points have been made as an effort to make it the chief issue of the campaign, previously Dewey politicians have tabbed as an effort to make it the chief issue of the campaign.

Obviously urged on by the crowd's response, Dewey went a little further, too, in firing barbs at his Democratic presidential opponent.

"There's a strong temptation, when the going gets tough, to turn aside from the national interest and begin to complain and scold and take up smaller causes," he said.

This fitted the pattern set by Herbert Brownell, Jr., GOP campaign manager, in charging in Philadelphia that Mr. Truman had resorted to "cheap political tactics" in his campaigning.

Democrats said this added up to a Democratic decision that Mr. Truman and his charges can't be ignored entirely.

Dewey's Los Angeles appearance was Hollywood night in his campaign, and the movie capital packaged it with the customary flourish.

There were flood light, dancing girls, movie stars and whatnot before the nominee roared out to the Bowl from his hotel, police sirens wide open.

The candidate called for a world wide "counter offensive of truth against communism." He said movies could play a big part in this by showing the world the American way of life.

Juvenile Marriages

There can be no doubt that the appalling increase in the number of divorces is mainly due to the child-marriages that are taking place all about us, most of which are doomed to disaster. For marriage is not a pastime with which kids are free to divert themselves and which they can drop when they are tired of it. It is the taking upon one's self obligations that affect not only the individual boy and girl, but that may determine the fate of generations yet unborn.

Certainly there is no more pathetic sight in the world than that of immature youngsters rushing into marriage for which they are totally unprepared and which are almost sure to bring misery to them. Yet we see this happening every day. Girls mistake having a crush on a boy for the grand passion and marry for the sake of having a swanky wedding. Boys, without home, doll-faced little cutie, marry before they finish grammar school, or have any way of making a dollar to support a wife.

Then comes the inevitable awakening when their dope dream. The boy and girl find out that they have made a wrong diagnosis of their symptoms. They are just in love with love. Also, they discover that they are bored with domesticity and that they desire to live alone and have good times.

And the boy begins to step out at night, and the girl craves pretty clothes and diversion and she is tired of being a baby-sitter, so another marriage goes on the rocks.

Of course, not every young marriage is a failure. There are teenagers who are capable of the grand passion and who marry and live happily ever afterwards, as the old story book says. But these are rare as hens' teeth, because the success of a marriage depends upon the congeniality of the husband and wife. And nobody can tell beforehand how a growing boy and girl are going to develop.

That is the unanswerable argument against juvenile marriages. They may turn out all right, but the chances are even-Steven that they will not have a single idea or taste in common, and that they will spend their lives in wondering whatever made them pick out the ones they did for their life mates. So it doesn't take much gumption to see why the best bet in marriage is the husband and wife whose characters and ways have jelled, and with whom one

SERIAL STORY Sat. Sept. 25 XXXII

Caution, prudence, reason, all left him in a rising terror of losing her forever. Moving instinctively on the split second, as he had done a hundred times in his life before, he lunged across the room and knocked the gun on to the floor by sweeping his hand through hers—so that she was left staring at her empty fingers and at the sun where it lay out on the carpet at the edge of the bed.

"Hilary!" she whispered, and her feverish eyes searched the room again minutely, without success.

"I had to stop you," he said apologetically. "There is some sort of pattern. Don't ever meddle with it."

"Hilary, wherever you are, you've got to hear me! You've got to come back and help me!" "I did come back," he said.

"Don't let them do this to me! Don't let them take me away! I'm safe here with you—I'm afraid to go!"

"I know, sweetheart—I know." "Afraid, Hilary, can't you hear? Dreadful things can't happen to me here—please let me stay!"

"Not like that, Sabrina—that won't help."

"You don't answer," she said hopelessly, and put both hands to her throbbing temples. "I can't hear you. You won't help me. What shall I do?"

Aunt Effie's voice, too bright, too brisk, too firmly implying that all was right with the world, floated up the stairs.

"Sabrina! We're waiting!" "What shall I do?" she said again, between her hands.

There was no answer he could give but silence. He withdrew backwards to the window seat, moving with infinite care, and sat down there remotely, striving now to eradicate himself from her consciousness after that one moment's reckless contact. He had done all he could, he did not dare do more.

She gazed about her a moment longer forlornly. She went to the desk and picked up his little brown pipe with caressing fingers. "Could I take this with me?" she asked, and waited hopefully for his reply. "Hilary—please!"

But he sat very still on the window seat, cutting himself off from her deliberately.

Aunt Effie called again, from the foot of the stairs. "Sabrina! Your father's in a hurry!"

With a sigh, she replaced the pipe on the desk and left the room empty-handed, drooping, numb with despair.

A docile automaton, she collected her hat and coat and bag at Aunt Effie's bidding and went down to the front door. But she headed, with her coat over her arm, she climbed obediently into the rumble seat with the suitcases, heard Aunt Effie making bright farewells to Mrs. Pilton, heard mind directions given by her father regarding the despatch of his luggage to the lodgings in Wells, heard her own voice asking Mrs. Pilton to please be kind to Muffin.

The big black limousine driven by a uniformed chauffeur was coming from the left, much too fast for so narrow a lane. Aunt Effie's wide and always uncertain clashes, of the gate to the left covered much more than her half of the road, just where the branches of the old oak overhung the hedge. There was a blast of the limousine's horn, a grinding of brakes, a thundering crash, and then a sharp, snapped-off scream.

The nose of the big limousine was jammed into the side of the smaller car, which was tilted at a crazy angle with two wheels clear of the ground. The chauffeur, who was merely shaken up a little and whose glass was all intact, jumped out and ran, white-faced, to where Sabrina had been thrown clear, into the ditch.

She lay very still, face down. As he turned her over and raised her in his arms, Mrs. Pilton came running down the drive, and Father flung towards them, dabbing with his handkerchief at a long cut in his cheek from the broken windshield. Aunt Effie had quietly fainted behind the wheel.

Father stood staring down at the chauffeur's quiet burden.

"She was in the back," he was saying in a dazed, apologetic sort of way. "There was nothing for her to hold to—she must have been shot out on her head. Is she all right?" He peered suddenly into the man's rigid face, in growl.

"Is she all right?" he insisted.

"I don't know," said the chauffeur between still lips. "I—can't be sure."

"Hilary—Hilary, where are you?" She had reached the second flight of stairs already, on her way to him. "Hilary, something's happened—I don't have to get out all right?"

Then she saw him.

A generation from now, on a summer day, three village children will come along the lane and pause at the sagging gate of Nuns Farm, gazing in at the riot of untended bloom which was once the herbaceous border. And one of them, a visiting cousin from the next county, will express a desire to pluck such lovely flowers, all going to waste on an empty house where the window glass is latticed by ancient tendrils and Virgin creepers, where a top-lash shutter is flung wide to the sunlight, and the basement steps open in the June heat.

"Come away, Mildred, do!" the others will advise her in lowered tones, dragging her back from the weed-grown doorway into the lane again. "We never go there—it's haunted!"
